The shipbuilding yard has a one hundred and eighty ton vessel ready for launching. This schooner has only been under construction three months and will prove the quickest built vessel of her size yet built in Newfoundland — another point scored by Capt. Jas. Jones, the master builder. The new vessel will be named C. Bryant, after a director of the Trading and Export Co. and the oldest employee of the Trading Co. now in the service.

The aux. coaster F. P. Union is due from St. John's with a load of supplies and will as soon as discharged proceed to Fogo District to load a cargo of fish.

The fish taken this season is splendidly cured and the fruits of last year's propaganda on standardization and the carrying out of the Standardization Act—out of 15000 qtls. handled at Port Union the past two weeks only 20 qtls. of West India have been culled from that large quantity.

Some of the know-alls and political degenerates who so abundantly abused the Trading Co. and its President during the past session of the Legislature might be interested in knowing that the Trading Co. is as staunch as ever and doing more business than ever, and its General Manager is rapidly regaining his former health and energy and can be seen daily directing the business here from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m., Sundays excepted.

All the houses at Port Union are occupied and three families have been added to the residents the past three weeks.

The census returns show Port Union to have a population of about 600, consequently 500 persons settled at Port Union during the past four years. How many commercial or public men can lay claim to such an achievement during the past four years?

RINGSIDE, Jersey City, Sept. 5.—Brian Downey, of Cleveland, and Johnny Wilson, of Boston, fought twelve tame and uninteresting rounds in their bout here this afternoon to settle their dispute over the world's middleweight championship. However, it was the opinion of a majority of newspaper men and fight experts at the ringside, that Downey won on points.

FIGHTING HER OWN DESTINY

CHAPTER XXXV.

This then was the secret of Ethel's life—this was why she looked sad and wistful—why the expression of her beautiful spirituelle face recalled that of Elaine in the picture. She loved Paul Fleming, with all the strength of her heart, and he knew nothing of it.

"Sin spreads like a ripple on a clear pool," she said to herself; "where will the consequences of mine end? I married the life of the only man I can ever love; and now I stand between this girl and her happiness. Ah me! I pay a bitter price for being called Lady Charnleigh."

CHAPTER XXXVI.

THREE months passed, and the engagement between the heiress of Crown Leighton and Captain Fleming was made known. People had but one opinion. As far as Lady Charnleigh herself was concerned, it was of course a very poor match, for she might have mated with the highest and wealthiest in the land; but, looking at it from a fair point of view, it was exactly right. It must have been a keen disappointment to Captain Fleming—so nearly heir, and yet after all; now Crown Leighton would be his by marriage, that was next best to inheriting it. Many people said, too, that he would be sure to have the title as well—letters patent would be taken out, and he would be Lord Charnleigh after all. Public opinion said it was a very proper ending to what had been a most romantic case.

Captain Fleming was the only one who could hardly believe his happiness to be real—it seemed to him so great, it could scarcely be true. It was not for her wealth that he loved Lady Charnleigh. If she had been penniless, he would have married her, and worked for her as man never worked before, he would have better pleased if she had been poor, that he might the strength and purity of his love. The only drawback to him was that wealth must come to him from the hands of his wife. He would fain have had it otherwise.

He had pleaded with her for an early marriage, but she had looked up at him with weary eyes, and prayed him to let that question rest—not to mention marriage yet; she was happy and did not want to change her life so quickly. His handsome face clouded over so slightly; he seized her hand and held it tightly.

"Leonie," he cried "do you know there are times when I almost doubt whether you love me? I look forward to my marriage with you as the crowning happiness of my life—you think of it merely as an uncomfortable change; that does not look like love, Leonie."

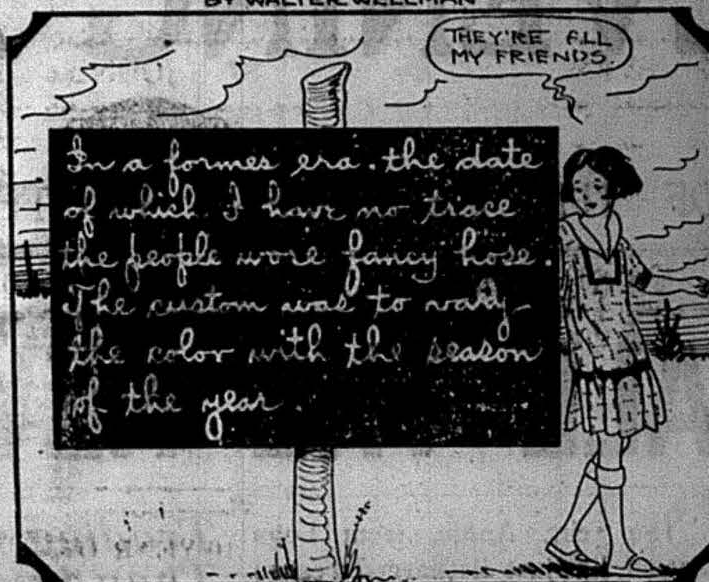

Any reproach from Paul touched her keenly. Had she not already done him harm enough? Had she not wronged him more deeply than woman ever wronged man before? She was not given to caressing, but when she saw that wonderful look on his face, she bent her head and kissed his hand.

"Do not doubt me, Paul," she whispered. "My life is so novel to me. Let me enjoy it undisturbed for some time longer."

He was satisfied; he was beside himself with joy than she had voluntarily given him this little caress—she who was so distant and reserved. Her manner had often puzzled him. He had no right to doubt her, yet there was something so strange about her conduct. She seemed always as though she were trying to make amends to him for something—as though all her affection and kindness came from a desire to make amends. He could not understand her. She had never wronged him; it was not her fault that she was the nearest of kin. There was no reason why she should accept him if she did not love him. She had had offers from some of the most distinguished men in England, and had refused them for his sake. She must love him after all; but he wished that she would show her affection in a fashion that he could better understand. He saw her often—he rode over from Weldon every day—but, in some strange kind of way, he never seemed to draw nearer to her or to understand her inner life better than he had at first.

Ethel Dacre was still at Crown Leighton, although it was sorely against her will that she remain there; but General Dacre had gone abroad, and he had said that he should much prefer his daughter's residing with her friend during his absence than keeping house all alone at Westfield. Ethel could offer no reasonable objection, therefore she remained.

One bright morning in September, Leonie stood at the library window alone. The lilacs were dead, the roses faded, and in their place great sunflowers turned their bright faces upward, and tall dahlias reared their heads with handsome flowers. The leaves were falling from the trees; they lay, crimson, brown and gold, on the ground; the wind swept them along, and then moaned over them.

The fair face looking wistfully from the window at the falling leaves change most remarkably. It was not less beautiful; but the brightness and radiance were gone—there was a worn look that did not belong to youth—the eyes were very bright, but there was somewhat of fever in their brightness—there was a flush on the beautiful face, but it told more of unrest than of health—there was a tremulous movement about the white jewelled hands, a sudden quivering of the lips, both tokens of a mind ill at ease.

No one saw Lady Charnleigh without remarking the change. Miss Templeton had been from Kew to spend the summer vacation, as she told the parents of her pupils, with the Countess, of Crown Leighton, and when she had seen Leonie, she had cried out in wonder—

"This gay life does not suit you, Lady Charnleigh; are so changed. You look as though you had had long years of incessant gaiety—you want rest."

"Rest!" the girl had re-echoed mournfully. "There is no rest in this world."

And after Miss Templeton had been there for a few days, and had noticed, to her dismay, the fever of unrest in which the girl lived, her surprise had become greater still.

"You cannot sleep in the dark," she had said, one day, after over-hearing a conversation between Leonie and her maid; "you do not like the twilight; you cannot endure to be alone; you crave for continual excitement as children do for food. My dear Lady Charnleigh, you give me the impression that you are at war with yourself."

How the words had taunted. How they taunted her still! They described her state of mind, not a struggle, but a continual warfare—and the warfare was self against self. There was hardly a single moment, night or day, during which her better, nobler, higher self was not crying out in rebellion against the deed she had done. There was hardly a single moment in which heart or soul was free from that war. She was swayed by impulse as were the leaves by the wind. She would rise one morning determined to write to Paul Fleming, and tell him all—determined to undo her great wrong—to give up the wealth she was so unjustly keeping from him—to be honest, loyal, and true. The resolution would last until she went down stairs and saw the magnificence that surrounded her.

GILLETTE'S LYE EATS DIRT

MADE IN CANADA

"I cannot give it up," the unhappy girl, would say; "it is the best part of my life. I could not endure poverty after this."

At other times, the memory of the lover she had lost would be so strong within her that she would be ready to give up everything she had in the world only to see him again. At such times she loathed even the name of Paul Fleming; she avoided seeing him when he came; she went out into the green solitude of the woods and called by name him whom she had sent from her with a lie. No wonder that the radiant face grew worn-looking, and that the bright eyes lost their clear light; no wonder that sweet enatches of song and sunny laughter were no longer heard.

Lady Charnleigh stood watching the falling leaves. The wind no longer waited to her rich, warm gusts of perfume; it was wailing over the dead flowers.

"My life is virtually over," she was thinking to herself; "this world has no more to give me. I have lost my lover; nor spring nor summer will ever bring him back to me. Some time, sooner or later, I shall marry Paul Fleming. I shall live and die Countess of Charnleigh. I shall live and die one of the fairest and richest women in England. But my life will not have been a happy one, though I have my heart's wish granted to me. Oh, if I had never found that will, or if, on finding it, I had but acted loyally, Bertram would have been mine, and I should have been happy."

She had made herself believe that in a short time she should forget all that was unpleasant and enjoy her wealth as she had been wont to do. She had believed herself capable of growing hardened in her sin but the conscience she had done her best to trample under foot seemed to grow more vigorous in its opposition day by day.

"I am at war with myself," she said, "and peace will come to me never more. Was the prize worth the sin? Too late! It is too late now. I cannot change what I have done. I must take my life as it comes, and make the best of it."

LOCAL ITEMS

The weather up country today is calm and fine.

The Police have been kept on the move lately looking for moonshiners, and during the past week they have given much attention to the neighborhood of Topsail Rd., but without result.

The Sunday excursion trains to Tors Cove and Kelligrews will shortly be withdrawn for the season. Should weather conditions remain favorable however it is likely that they will be run till the end of the month.

The members of the Church of England Cathedral Choir are asked to meet at the Cathedral on tomorrow, Wednesday morning at 10.15 for their annual picnic.

A football game will be played tomorrow night between teams representing the city and the Regiment. The former will be under the guidance of Mr. W. Duggan, and the latter under that of Mr. R. H. Tait.

One of the Municipal Stone Crushers which broke down on the west end of LeMerchant Rd. several weeks ago is still stalled there, a watchman being employed constantly to prevent accidents in connection with traffic.

The funeral of the late Jeremiah Coffey took place yesterday afternoon from the residence of his niece 104 Gower street. A guard of honor attended from the T.A. and B. Society of which the deceased had been a member for many years. Interment was at Belvedere Cemetery, the arrangements being looked after by Undertaker Carnell.

The idea of giving the concrete curbs thruout the city a coat of lim, seems to be a good one. At least it shows that the streets are receiving some of those little attentions which are theirs by right. No doubt Mayor Morris will follow this up with some further and more substantial evidences of his desire to improve affairs generally.

This evening's football game Guards vs. B.I.S. promises to be one of the most interesting of the series. A win for the Guards would place the B.I.S. Star and Guards in running for the Cup. The game is scheduled to start at 6.30 p.m. and players are requested to be on hand as the official referee will "blow his whistle" sharp on time.

DRY DOCK BUSY

The Dry Dock has been a busy spot the past month or more, many local steamers and schooners having been overhauled, repaired and some re-classed. Amongst those recently repaired were several of the sealing fleet and one of these, the Thetis, is now being replanked below the water line and otherwise improved. The Sagona is also on dock at present undergoing extensive repairs.

Druggists also sell larger packages. Made in Canada. Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada, of Bayer Manufacture of Monacopolis).

KNOCKED DOWN BY CART

A lumber cart which, while being driven around the corner of Water Street and Springdale Street yesterday afternoon, knocked down a young lady who was crossing at the junction. The driver did not slacken speed to any great extent and was not seen by the young lady in time to get out of danger. She was struck by the shaft and was knocked down, falling a short distance from the wheel of the cart. The driver managed to stop the horse before any further damage was done and the girl escaped with some nasty bruises and a severe shaking up. Complaints are numerous from people of this section, who say that carmen do not negotiate this corner with sufficient caution.

LAST NIGHT'S GAME

One of the largest gatherings for the season witnessed the Star-C.E.I. game, which took place on St. George's Field last evening and resulted in a win for the former by a score of 2 to nil. The brand of football handed out, did not come up to expectations, nevertheless the game was interesting. Some good individual work was got in, but there was practically no combination play. In the first half Adams scored shortly before the period finished, and in the second half Evans did the needful. The C.E.I. were in very poor form and had several excellent chances to score, but were unable to avail of the opportunity. The remainder of the game promises to be interesting, as three teams are now in the running for first place, and the result of tonight's match will have a big bearing on the championship.

REDUCED FARES FOR HALIFAX SPORTS

The Reid Nfld. Company has decided to give a special rate for the benefit of those who are going to Halifax in connection with the sports in which some city athletes are to participate. The Company, we understand, was approached by Mr. G.W.B. Ayre on the subject of reducing the cost of transportation and return tickets will be issued to competitors and supporters alike who may be going. These tickets will be good for 30 days and the rate will be $43.95, a figure which will undoubtedly tend to increase the number of fans who will go to the Nova Scotia capital to witness the big sporting events.

THE SONG OF THE HAMMERS

The song of the hammers, sing!
Joyous their clamors ring,
Ring, ring, ring!
Metal on metal,
They bang and rattle,
Till life's old battle
Grows easier far
In the endless war
Against want
So gaunt,
With his hunger and tears.
Oh, blessed years
That give us the ring
Of the song we sing:
Bang, crash!
Roar and clash!
Hammer on hammer,
No hesitant stammer,
But round with a swing,
They thunder and ring,
Ring, ring, ring!
Oh, the joy that the hammers bring.

MORE HIDDEN "TREASURE"

Sunday morning two men discovered five kegs under an uptown wharf, and on examination found them to contain 25 gallons of booze. The matter was kept quiet and procuring a wagon the liquor was carried to a more secure hiding place. The original owner has not yet put in an appearance, but there is no doubt, despite the activities of the authorities, large quantities of liquor are finding its way into the country.

10-YEAR OLD BANK ROBBER

PRISONERS BROUGHT IN FROM WEST COAST.

With a record of mis-deeds that few adult criminals can boast of, ten-year old Lawrence Furlong, of St. George's, has been sentenced to serve a term of three months imprisonment in the Penitentiary. This young incorrigible has by depredations of various sorts, made his name a terror to a whole community and his attempt at a coup de frass by breaking and entering the Royal Bank of Canada at St. Georges landed him in the toils. He entered the bank at 7 o'clock in the morning but beyond damaging some property he effected nothing by his daring attempt at bank robbery. He, with another prisoner, Arthur Young, has been sentenced to six months imprisonment, was brought to the city by yesterday's express in charge of Sergt. Goodland. Young was convicted of breaking into the Log Cabin at Stephenville and stealing therefrom clothing to the value of $300, the property of Mr. Charles Penney, manager of the Stephenville Buttery Factory.

A third prisoner, in charge of Const. Martin, was brought in from Grand Falls to serve a term of six months for stealing $140 from a resident of that place. Ninety dollars of the stolen money was recovered on his arrest.

NEW STRAWBERRY SPECIES ON DISPLAY

Ellis & Co's window, Water St., is displaying a new strawberry species received from Canada by Mr. W. A. McKay. The strawberry, which has been produced by cross fertilization of various other strawberry species, is the most prolific fruit bearer that grows. Single plants have yielded a gallon and a half of berries. The one in Ellis' window is ripe and in blossom in September month—an unusual thing.

In this country, Mr. McKay believes, the species would grow from July to October, being ever-bearing during that period.

The plant will be placed on the market in the fall of 1921.

THEATRICAL COMPANY COMING

Next month St. John's will have another visit from the Gladys Klark theatrical troupe who were here for a brief engagement two years ago. We understand that many, if not all, of those who made up the company on the occasion of the last visit, are still with Miss Klark who is, herself, quite a favorite with city theatre goers. The company will play for a brief engagement at the Casino Theatre.

The Position Of Labor

By J. R. Smallwood.

It is relevant, on this Labor Day eve, to discuss briefly the status, or position, of the industrial world in 1921, and labor status therein.

At the outset it must be admitted that Labor the world over is at this moment experiencing a period of depression in common with "business" and commerce the world over. The reason will of course be found in the fact that both are subject to the same blind forces of Economic Determinism—both are the victim, at this time, to blind, groping economic laws by which the world is inevitably guided.

The laws governing the modern industrial fabric are such as to make good times certain in themselves the seeds of bad times.

There cannot be good times without the corresponding bad times.

There cannot be bad times without the corresponding good times. They are mutually reciprocal.

The good times are seen when industry is going ahead at full swing. Then there is high-pressure production. Then there is widespread employment of producers; and consequently, of unskilled labor, or distributive labor, or directive labor, and indeed of all kinds of labor.

Being this general employment, on account of high-pressure production, there is good wages. And because there is good wages, of course, a high consumption of goods must result. And, because of high consumption, it is that industry can carry on at high pressure.

Thus there are good times. But good times themselves carry the seeds of bad times.

There comes the inevitable time when, as a result of some few years of high-pressure production, there is too much produced—there is a glut of production. This means, simply, that more has been produced than can be consumed.

That means, of course, that production must slow down. And that in turn means that employment must be cut down. And that cutting down of employment comes because there is already too much produced.

The number of producers, and hence of all other kinds of labor, must be cut down.

Industry has to slow up, and wait until the surplus production has been absorbed.

But this absorption is a very slow process. And the reason for this, naturally, is the greatly reduced purchasing power of the consumers.

And the reason for the greatly reduced buying power is the fact that there is widespread unemployment, with its attendant absence of wages.

So that there is unemployment because of overproduction.

And the unemployment has to last until the surplus production has been consumed. And this is a slow process.

When the surplus has been consumed and there is new impetus spread again. Again is there good gar, J. W. Forbes, Mrs. Woolfrey, Jas. times. And again, with the completion of the inevitable circle, comes the glut and the unemployment.

Labor and business are alike subject.

BUILDING SCHOOL AT ELLISTON, T.B.

A fine new Methodist school is being built at Elliston, T.B., by Rev. W. W. Cotten of that place. The old school has been outgrown and the new one is intended to hold more, and be a modern, up-to-date school at that. The cost is estimated at over $12,000.

Mr. Cotten, who is an ex-lieutenant of an English regiment, having gone across and enlisted as a private, is noted for his progressiveness and energy, and it is owing to his personality largely that the school is under way. He is at present in England, undergoing treatment for a wound in the head, received in the war. He holds the Distinguished Service Order Medal.

GIRL DROWNED AT PLACENTIA

A report from Sergt. Kent to Inspector General Hutchings yesterday conveyed the news of a sad drowning at Placentia. The report was as follows:

"I beg leave to inform you that Bride Collins the 11 year old daughter of Peter Collins of this place was drowned here this afternoon.

John J. Murphy, his wife, four children and his servant girl with Bride Collins, eight in all, left in a small boat. The tide was running down strong at the time, they had a sail on the boat and allowed her to drift across a large boat moored at Murphy's wharf. The small boat turned bottom up and they all got in the water. The ferry boat was on this side at the time and went to their rescue or they would all have been drowned. The body has not yet been recovered."

PERSONAL

Mr. Walter Cacciola of New York left by to-day's express for his home. He came here two weeks ago to take part in the beautiful ceremonies held in St. Francis Xavier's Church Bar Haven, on the festival day of St. Augustine, Sunday, August 28.

During his sojourn at Bar Haven he sang the solo parts at High Mass and Vespers, and conducted the choir which rendered a programme of magnificence, and splendor on this most auspicious day, Sunday, August 28th. By special request he sang some Sacred Canticles at the exercises given in honor of the Sacred Heart of Jesus on Friday September 2nd. On Sunday morning he sang a solo in the Cathedral at the Office, during Last Mass. In the evening he was heard again in a beautiful solo before benediction.

Mr. Cacciola cultivated a wide circle of friends during his brief stay in Newfoundland.

SUSU SAILS

The S. S. Susu sailed for the Fogo mail service at 10 o'clock this morning taking the following passengers: Miss E. Stead, Miss T. Stead, Miss M. Stead, Mr. Greenslade, W. H. Sum-given industry. Employment is widespread again. Again is there good gar, J. W. Forbes, Mrs. Woolfrey, Jas. times. And again, with the completion of the inevitable circle, comes the glut and the unemployment.

Labor and business are alike subject.

Women Councillors of Poplar Invite Police to Arrest Them

LONDON, Sept. 5—Five women Councillors of Poplar were arrested to-day to the accompaniment of stirring scenes. Their arrest had been postponed out of consideration for their sex and the hope that the trouble arising between the Borough Council and the London County Council respecting taxes would be adjusted. But the women themselves invited the sheriff to arrest them and appointed the hour of three o'clock in the afternoon for the ceremony at the Town Hall, assuring the sheriff that at that hour, there was no danger of disorders. Accordingly immense crowds, mostly women, gathered inside and outside the Town Hall. The Councillors were headed by Susan Lawrence and Mrs. Edgar Lansbury who delivered far-well speeches both in the hall and from the balcony to boisterous crowds of demonstrators and sympathizers.

SIMLA, Sept. 5—Lord Reading, Viceroy of India, during the course of a speech at a joint sitting of the Council of State, and the Legislative Assembly on Saturday last, said it would be wrong to assume that the rising of Mophah in Malabar District was symptomatic of the whole of India, as that district has always been a storm centre.

SLANDER AND SLANG CAME FROM THE OPPOSITION

PRAISES THE 1898 CONTRACT.

Take up the debates every day and what do you read? Lies, slander and slang; from men whom you would expect better from; low and dirty slang; it may be good bait for those who occupy the gallery, but when you take into consideration the vast majority of fishermen around the island they count very few and treat such conduct with silent contempt. As far as I am concerned, I only know one man, the man of the fishermen who has done wonders in their best interest in the last ten years, and what is good in their interest, is good for the whole country and that is why I am with him. Many of the best friends of the Opposition were disgusted with their conduct while the House was in session. There they are day after day holding up the business of the country; sending lies broadcast into the money and fish markets, trying to injure the country's best interest and to satisfy their petty spite; without offering any proposition to benefit the country and the people at large.

While at the same time a great proposition is before the country. Capitalists with millions behind them knocking at our doors to spend their millions in opening up the country that would give thousands of our people employment, but every scheme was brought to bear to hamper the Government to destroy our prospects, and if the country lost this opportunity, good-bye to the future, and the blame can be put on the shoulders of the Opposition who are the biggest enemies to the country's welfare, and when they go under the sod, their names will go with them, while Coaker's name will live in history as the greatest benefactor that the country ever knew in lifting up the fishery as they were never lifted up before.

My experience of Coaker is that he is clean, honest, truthful, reliable; he is a gentleman. What politician can claim such a record. If he made mistakes, they were meant in the best interest of the fishermen. He is a man working for the best interest of the working people; his whole ambition is the fishermen's best interest. Those who are slandering him their only interest in this country is their own pockets.

This country would be twenty-five million dollars better off to-day if the '98 contract was not interfered with. The people were horrified in regard to the '98 contract. Under that contract the country had everything to gain and nothing to lose. Reids owned the whole Railway outfit; the Government held no responsibility. Reids were to find traffic and make traffic to make the line pay. Under that contract the West End line was brought to Riverhead; the buildings and surroundings speak for themselves and the hundreds of men that are employed there, which was only a wilderness before; the docks were improved which were hardly ever idle since; rolling stock, stations and other improvements all over the island; the magnificent Bay steamers and the cross country train also brought about; the pavement on Water Street; the street cars; the great hotel that was to be built, and started near the old depot and the walls now going to decay; all brought about by the '98 contract and nothing done since through the blunders of the jealous Opposition who lived at that time, who would sacrifice the whole country to satisfy their petty spite. There was twenty-five million dollars to Reids' backs to open up the resources of the country; all that was required for the Government to give power to Reids to transfer their interest. Today every sod in the country would have been turned over and the wealth brought to the surface if it was there, and settlements opened in every part of the interior of the country. Here we are to-day worse off than we were twenty-three years ago, and the blame must rest on the shoulders of that jealous and spiteful Opposition. Very few of them are living to-day, but their names will go down to history that will stink in the nostrils of the people who were robbed, plundered and cheated of the good times that we would be enjoying to-day from the fruits of the '98 contract.

Before the Reids came to this country they built some of the greatest structures that were ever built in Canada in connection with bridges and railways; they brought brains and money when they came to this country that our own people got the benefit of. The country was hardly known to the outside world until the Reids came amongst us, made their homes here and reared up their families and are still with us, employing thousands of our people who appreciate them. If it was not for that jealous Opposition to the '98 contract, the country would be twenty-five million dollars better off to-day, and twenty-five thousand of our people employed in the interior of the country and our bays where mineral is known to exist. Today there are great propositions before the country to give our people employment, but the jealous Opposition is hampering the future prosperity as it was to the '98 contract. Yes, the Reids have done a lot for this country; honest and fair-minded people cannot shut their eyes to the fact, and if they were not interfered with under the '98 contract they would have done wonders for the country, but they were hampered, abused and slandered at every opportunity by unscrupulous politicians when the time would offer; and slandered them to gain their political ends by gulling and fooling the people. That was the history of the country since the '98 contract. Are the people to be gulled much longer? The action of one man is the cause of all the trouble concerning the railway blunder and the country's misfortune.

ADVERTISE IN THE ADVOCATE

ACTIVITY ALONG
WATER FRONT
INCREASES DAILY

LARGE QUANTITIES OF NEW FISH COMING IN—BUSINESS WILL BE BRISK THIS FALL, IS THE PREDICTION.

The waterfront is already beginning to assume that air of activity which marks the coming of the autumn season. Each day sees the coming of goodly quantities of new codfish from the outlying settlements and the next few weeks will witness the arrival of the first of the outport schooners with their season's catch ready for market. While as yet there is little doing in the city in the purchase of fish, reports from many of the outports indicate that buying is brisk. Business people here say that there is a noticeable change for the better in trade generally and it is believed that as the season advances conditions will improve to an extent that has not been reached since the country first experienced the full effect of post-war conditions. Another fact which it is predicted will tend towards bringing trade nearer to normal than we have known it for years, is that prices of commodities are almost certain to show an appreciable downward tendency between now and the time when the buying of winter supplies will have reached its height. Therefore, while fish prices in the local market will, owing to the removal of the Regulations, be considerably below what they were last year, the loss to the fishermen will be partially made up for by the increased value of his dollar in the purchase of provisions and goods.

Beautiful Monument
For Bowring Park

ANOTHER EVIDENCE OF SIR EDGAR BOWRING'S GENEROSITY

There recently arrived in the city from England a beautiful monument which is to be erected in Bowring Park. This memorial, we understand, is the gift of Hon. Sir Edgar Bowring to the city and while it is being erected to commemorate the heroic deeds and sacrifices of our brave soldiers, living and dead, it must also stand as another eloquent tribute to the splendid generosity of the donor. The outstanding feature of the memorial is the figure in bronze of a "bomber" surmounting it and it is said to be of excellent design and exceptional workmanship. The monument will, in all probability, be erected in the Park in the near future.

THE POSITION OF LABOUR

ject to that economic law. That is not exactly the position following the great war. The reason for the world depression since the war is a different reason. It is not overproduction—it is under capital. Capital is vitally necessary to business and trade. And capital, during the war, was consumed in the production of articles which could not reproduce themselves as usual. Therefore the ending of the war found this universal prevalence of shortage of capital.

The process of creating new capital is a long-drawn out one. That is what is going on now. That is why business everywhere is so "cautious." That is why there is unemployment.

But the process is slowly nearing completion. In a year or two or three it will in all probability have been completed, and there will be a period of new prosperity. Then again, will the old economic laws begin operation.

And that, in naked terms, is the truth concerning modern industrialism.

As long as these blind economic laws are allowed to work so long will there be depression attendant upon prosperity.

And as long as the world allows these blind forces to hold it in subjection, there will be the misery and poverty and peril now seen in industrialism, so long will industry be carried on at the awful expense as in the past.

Competition is the keynote of those forces. Co-operation for mutual benefit is the only cure.

The world had to come to it.

A truth to be uttered, a cause to be won.—
Come forth in your myriads, come forth every one

Come youths in your vigor, come men in your prime,
Come age with experience, fresh gathered from time;

Come workers, you're welcome, come thinkers, you must,
Come thick as the clouds as the midsummer dust,
Or the waves of the ocean, gleaming bright in the sun,—

There's a truth to be told and a cause to be won.—

General Election By Mid-
December, Ottawa Forecast

CABINET OUTLOOK.

Reorganization Seems Certain — Protection Dominant Election Issue.

OTTAWA, Sept. — Dissolution of Parliament and a general election by the end of the year is the message the Prime Minister is expected to convey in his momentous utterance tonight in London. The official word must come from Mr. Meighen himself, and meanwhile his colleagues here have closed their lips on the subject but the special conditions under which it was made as well as the quiet intimations in Cabinet circles remove any doubt of the accuracy of the election forecast.

The contest, it is planned, will be on and over before the end of the year and the Parliament that assembles in January or February will be a new one. The complexion of the Government to be will be for the electors to determine.

Mr. Meighen, in coming to the decision he is expected to announce, has encountered the most difficult problem of his career. He came home personally inclined very strongly to an election and supporting that view were many whose counsel he valued highly.

A DIFFICULT DECISION.

No sooner did he address himself to the question than he was bombarded by opponents of a general election, representing that it would be bad for the party and bad for the country to precipitate dissolution before another session, the greatest argument perhaps being the implied promise of redistribution before an election.

The alternative was a session of Parliament but there were objections to a regular one and a very real apprehension as to the capacity of the Government to carry on under the peculiar conditions which would obtain with the majority so slim and the stimulus to party warfare so pronounced in view of an imminent election.

The middle course—a special session of limited legislative activity—was suggested and for the past week the accepted opinion here was that this would be followed. In that direction the pressure was very great and there is reason to believe that up to a day or so ago the Premier's inclination was to bring on a Fall session specially for redistribution. On Tuesday, however, the Census Bureau intimated that the census figures will not be ready before December, which would entail redistribution at a regular winter session. This announcement, thrown into the balance, was the last weighty influence favorable to dissolution.

The Premier for reasons indicated did not wish to have a regular session of Parliament and a special Fall session became impracticable with the announcement of the Census Bureau. So he decided yesterday it is understood—to go to the country, but in doing so he but follows what all along has been his pronounced personal inclination.

In bringing on dissolution he takes what generally will be regarded as the courageous course, but he anticipates some indignation from many of his own followers, who considered themselves secure in the assurance of another session.

Now comes a period of great political activity at Ottawa. The Premier is expected to reorganize his Cabinet in short order. Messrs. Reid and Calder are slated for the Senate. Mr. Doherty will probably retire, likewise Sir George Foster, while rumor at least mentions two other Ministers as likely to go.

It is not mistaking the facts to say that the decision to dissolve a parliament, comes as a great surprise to many in the Cabinet, to most of the political observers and to the rank and file of the party outside. No government ever went to the country with such a minimum of political preparation, but the campaign will be so long that it is hoped to remedy any such deficiency.

VOTING IN DECEMBER.

It is understood that the days in view will bring the voting also the middle of December or a little earlier. The Premier is not expected to announce the actual date tonight.

There are nine senatorial vacancies and an army of aspirants. The election campaign will rival in length that of 1917.

Mr. Meighen in London tonight is expected to call the tune. The Government's appeal to the country will be essentially on the fiscal issue with protection as the dominant theme coupled with an argument for stabilizing government.

The dissolution of Parliament will supersede the by-election in West York, for which writs had been issued with voting on October 6.

NEXT WINTER'S WIND
OF ARCTIC FLAVOR

Meteorologist at Clark University Begins Chilling Predictions.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—That next winter will be a cold one is the indication of weather data compiled by Dr. C. F. Brooks, formerly Meteorologist of the Federal Weather Bureau and now Associate Professor of Meteorology and Climatology at Clark University.

An analysis of the weather records of more than a century indicates that we are experiencing a series of alternations of severe and warm winters. Last fall, on the basis of his investigation, Dr. Brooks said that last winter would be warm. It was. And now he says that it is not unreasonable to expect that next winter will be a cold one and that the winter of 1922-23 will be a warm one.

The weather seems to be repeating itself. The present series of sharply alternating winters began in 1917-18 with the cold weather of that year. The winter of forty-five years before, 1872-73, inaugurated a series of winters that were severe, warm, severe, warm, etc., until 1882-83. And 113 years ago, indications from incompletely kept records are that the winter of 1804-5 began a similar series of alternations.

Lord Kitchener

LORD ESHER'S CANDID JUDGMENTS.

Lord Escher's book on Lord Kitchener ("The Tragedy of Lord Kitchener," Murray, 10s. 6d. net) is an extended character-study. It adds little to our knowledge of the inner history of the war, and its value is in its balanced and candid judgments. It is an honest and judicious book.

Lord Kitchener has suffered much through the injudicious over-praise of his earlier career. Nearly all the stock things that used to be said about him are untrue. He was not rough or intolerant, but courteous and patient to the other side. He was not cold but had a sentimental vein, though, as Lord Escher shrewdly observes, towards things rather than persons. Lord Escher, with a brutality that he probably does not intend, says that he thought of war after the manner of Darius—slow moving hordes concentrating upon their objective with fatal method; but this is to do injustice to the sureness of the strategic judgment that made him foresee a long war in August, 1914, and the German line of advance through Belgium, and the German overtures for peace in 1918. Lord Escher does not deny to him the gifts of an administrator in the East, and of the diplomat. He wanted to be Ambassador at Constantinople when Blerberstein was there, and Lord Escher thinks that there was more conscious cleverness in his diplomacy than is generally supposed. He quotes a surprising dictum of Lord Milner's about him—"Ruse, like Rhodes."

Kitchener, in whom "the slow processes of the Orient had been burnt by an Egyptian sun," who was always his own Chief of Staff, and, though a famous soldier, had absolutely no understanding of the organization of Continental war in Europe, was not an ideal Secretary of War in August, 1914, but the supreme confidence of the country in him justified his appointment, even if his later failure had been more complete than it was. He was probably right in raising a separate army and not using the Territorial organization. Lord Escher says that he was stirred by the response to his appeal, but the suggestion that this quickening of the pulse made it easier for him to resist conscription later is capable of a too unkind construction. It is quite true that the delay in adopting conscription was wasteful and prolonged the war, and that Lord Kitchener was chiefly responsible for it. In 1915 he was silent on conscription when the Cabinet was aching for a lead, and even after Mr. Lloyd George had become an open advocate of it.

But it is not necessary to look further for an explanation than the fact that he was doubtful about the moral effects of conscription at this stage, and regarded it as a branch of politics in which he felt himself barred from interfering. A story is told of a meeting of the Cabinet concerned with conscription at which indecision was at its height. Mr. Asquith reminded his colleagues that he had to meet Parliament and explain their policy in half an hour. Tell them, said Mr. Balfour, that we cannot make up our minds and are unfit to govern the country. With equal reason might Lord Kitchener complain that the politicians (except Mr. Lloyd George and Lord Curzon) did not give him a lead on conscription.

The truth is that his mind was slow and intensely conservative. At heart, he held by the old Chatham strategy of confining our military assistance to amphibious and subsidiary expeditions and he believed in the strategy of the Dardanelles enterprise and of what were called the "side shows." But he never realized consistently that that policy implied a purely defensive policy in France. His strategy mixed up the French idea of an early break through on the West and the "way round" by the East; he could not bring himself to choose between them; and he doubled the strain on us by trying both while still holding by the voluntary system, which would have been barely adequate for the traditional Chatham strategy, of skinning the enemy while our Allies held him.

A Story of the King
These doubts and ambiguities would have made him helpless if his early training had not incapacitated him for work in a political council. He used to perplex the Cabinet by his silence; and when he did speak it was so obscurely that it was more like thinking aloud. Mr. Balfour in particular never made any pretence of understanding him. Lord Kitchener could be volatile on occasion. Lord Escher tells of a motor drive to Winchester and back with the King, in which the King said that Lord Kitchener had talked so much he could not get in a word edgewise. There is another story of how Lord Kitchener, who was anxious to succeed Lord Milner as Viceroy, differed with Lord Morley, who had the nomination. "Lord Kitchener, either from shyness or pride, shocked the political susceptibilities of his principal host, showed himself at his worst, and ruined in a short hour his prospect of attaining his heart's desire. That night supposed to be guarded and silent, he was flush of talk with a copiousness of indiscreet opinion, praise and blame that made Lord Morley say afterwards "Never, never shall he go to India." That was the sort of thing that used sometimes to happen at Cabinet Councils.

The causes of his failure at the War Office have often been described, and Lord Escher confirms what has been said before. He knew nothing of the organization of the army and of the methods of Parliamentary control; he lost confidence in himself; he worked early and late and tried to do everything himself; and the physical strain told on one who was no longer young. But through it all he remained the great man. The tragedy of his life, to Lord Escher's eyes, is that he should have been called upon to do work for which he was unfitted. He was the hero suffering through no fault of his own, but through an excess of virtues that were inappropriate in his new conditions.

Lord Escher regards the shells agitation as an example of the eternal conflict between the old and the new, and Lord Kitchener was on the wrong side. He thinks that the "Northcliffe Press" in this controversy overstated a good case, and accuses it of hitting "below the belt," though why he should blame the newspapers and absolve Lord French is not made clear. "At the same time," he continues, "No detached mind could call in question Lord Northcliffe's choice of the higher expediency. He believed that Lord Kitchener was standing in the way of a freer development of our manufacturing resources for the production of munitions of war; therefore Lord Kitchener had to be broken or bent, because he was—in his loyal way—covering with his high authority the bland complacency of his subordinates at the War Office. This seemed the plain common sense of the matter then, and there is no evidence that it is less so now."

One may be content to leave it at that.

The great service of the book is that it shows us the sensitiveness and refinement of the man's nature. The title of the book, "The Tragedy of Lord Kitchener," would be ill-chosen if it were meant to suggest that he was a failure in the war. His mistakes can be measured; his services in strengthening the moral fibre of the nation cannot. What Lord Escher means by tragedy is something more subtle—namely, the moral suffering caused by intellectual doubt and vacillation, and by the misunderstanding of colleagues.

It is a paradox, but, though the book is so critical, there are few who will put it down without liking Lord Kitchener the more. Even his failures seem to enhance the grandeur of the figure.

Punkett, Sask.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for weakness. I had pains in the back and bearing-down pains in the abdomen and was in a general run-down condition. I could not sleep, rest or work and was quite unfit for to do even slight household tasks. A friend told me about your Vegetable Compound and I in my turn truly recommend it, as my severe symptoms vanished and I am better in every way. I do my own work, look after my children and see to chickens, a cow and my garden. I also recommend it for young girls who are weak and run down as my 16 year old daughter has taken it and is quite her own gay self again."—Miss FRED. WILBY, Punkett, Sask.

This letter is but one of a great number received every year from women, young and old, and from almost every walk of life. These letters testify to the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

She tried several medicines without finding relief. Finally she tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and in this letter tells what it did for her.

(BY J. R. SMALLWOOD)

"And this is what they want to kill," I mused to myself. I was gazing about me, in the giant premises of the Union Trading Company, Port Union, that eloquent testimony, as I have said in a previous article, of cooperation and unionism.

The scene that met my eyes was no ordinary one, and to me, who had seen something of the like before, there was a fundamental difference in the same work in Port Union and elsewhere in this country. For here, you see, the fishermen were doing their own work. Here they were performing the industrious tasks formerly performed for others, and tasks whose big returns went to others than themselves.

No wonder they would work like trojans.

The sight presented reminded me of anti-hills I had seen—everything was moving, nothing was still except the actual building, and as for myself, I had no more than a sneaking desire to haul myself out of the way for fear of hindering the work going ahead, and watching without being seen. In all that gang of workers I was the only idle one.

And this—this activity, this industriousness, this unexampled evidence of the best cooperation and unionism, they want to kill.

I want to say here now, that if every unionist in St. John's were only to take one look at Port Union, and another through the plants here, there would not be one remaining, smug and satisfied for Port Union and the F. P. U., and the chances are that they would return to St. John's imbued with the determination to appropriate, insofar as in them lay, the spectacle they had witnessed here. There would then be no talk of killing the F. P. U. and the Trading Company.

Talking about a modern plant—it is but typical of the whole to point out that the offices here are the best, largest and most modernly-equipped of any in Newfoundland. There is not in St. John's a suite of offices that can compare with that on the fourth floor of the big Port Union store.

It is typically American, and I saw in New York many such offices. The Bowring office on Battery Place, for instance, is very much after the style of this.

The houses in Port Union are all owned by the company, being rented to company workers. Each one is electrically lighted. They are uniformly built, ranging parallel to the waterfront. In fact, it is simply the case that everything in Port Union is owned by the Union Trading Company. And that is of course as it should be. Why, there is an aerated water company, which bottles drinks for all the North. There is a moving picture show. The schools and churches compare with any in the country, bar St. John's.

And this metropolis of the North they want to destroy and lay low.

Well, all I can say is that such destruction will be done over the dead bodies of every fisherman of the Northern section of this country.

They will not sit idle while their enemies destroy the sacred emblem of all that they hold dear and near—their unionism, their cooperation, their mutual aid.

CANADIAN SERVICE MAN DECLARES HE IS NOW CONVINCED

Member of Royal Engineers Says
Tanlac Does All That Is Claimed For It.

"It's been a long time since I felt as fine as I do now and I'm convinced that Tanlac is a medicine of unusual merit," said Robert Kirkpatrick, of the Royal Canadian Engineers, South Barracks, Halifax, N.S.

"At the time I began taking Tanlac I had been feeling run down for quite a while. I had no appetite and what little I did eat seemed to form in a lump in my stomach. I was bothered a good deal with terrible pains in my chest and between my shoulders and at times would gasp for breath like I was about to smother.

"Tanlac soon had me feeling like a different man. I eat anything I want now and nothing ever troubles me afterwards. I am free from aches and pains, too, and have gained twelve pounds in weight. It's no wonder so many people talk about Tanlac, for it's one medicine that does everything that is claimed for it."
